Abstract for the lecture: "The Geography of Wood" by Alan Crivellaro

In this lecture, Dr. Alan Crivellaro examines the intricate relationship between wood anatomy and the geographical distribution of plants, emphasising how environmental factors shape the structural properties of wood across different regions. By exploring the physiological adaptations of trees to diverse climates, Crivellaro illustrates how wood anatomy influences growth patterns, species distribution, and regional wood usage. The lecture also addresses timber use's ecological and economic impacts, highlighting patterns and challenges in the global wood trade. The Author underscores the importance of understanding wood anatomy for effective environmental management and industrial applications.

Zapraszamy bardzo do uczestnictwa.
